MARINE CORPS BASE CAMP PENDLETON, Calif. – Exhaustion set in on recruits of Company E, 2nd Recruit Training Battalion, as they fought their way through the Confidence Course during their Crucible at Edson Range, Nov. 5.

The Crucible is a 54-hour test of endurance in which recruits must conquer more than 30 different obstacles while they experience food and sleep deprivation.

Recruits found that teamwork was critical during the many challenges of the Confidence Course. Small unit leadership was utilized as recruits were broken down into groups of four and sent out to complete each obstacle the course had to offer.

“The Crucible’s Confidence Course emphasizes the recruits ability to negotiate obstacles that simulate a combat environment,” said Staff Sgt. Shawn M. Stallings, senior drill instructor, Platoon 2101. “The Crucible helps tie in the field training skills and tactical skills while allowing the recruits to be small unit leaders and utilize teamwork.”

While the course is similar to the one on the depot, the Crucible Confidence Course requires recruits to rely solely on each other to make it through each obstacle rather than having a drill instructor walk them through it.

Drill instructors briefed their recruits on the course and then sent them out to allow them to overcome it on their own.

During the course, recruits low and high crawled with their fire team carrying a combat load with them. Once recruits crawled to the ending point, waiting on them was an ammunition can run that was also done as a fire

MARINE CORPS BASE CAMP PENDLETON, Calif. – Company H, 2nd Recruit Training Battalion, learned the fundamentals of Marine Corps combat marksmanship at Edson Range, Oct. 31.

Recruits of Company G, 2nd Recruit Training Battalion, used grit and strength to conquer the Obstacle Course while learning their bodies physical and mental limits Oct. 31 aboard the depot.

The course consisted of several different challenges and obstacles. These varied from recruits having to climb a 20 foot high rope, pulling themselves over horizontal bars and lunging their bodies over various sized logs and walls. Prior to the recruits starting, Co. G drill instructors demonstrated each part of the course to recruits, showing the recruits the proper technique for each obstacle.

“The course is designed to test our physical endurance and to see what our capabilities are when we’re tired and weak,” said Recruit Kory B. Kistler, Platoon 2141. “A combat situation can turn into several different challenging obstacles, and you’re going to have to keep pushing through to stay alive and keep your fellow Marines alive.”

Recruits had to overcome every obstacle on the course before they proceeded to the next. If a recruit could not complete an obstacle, he was sent to the beginning to start again until finishing it.

team. They sprinted around a set-up trail with the 35-pound ammunition cans to the end of the trail where recruits then threw a simulated grenade at a target.

The Two Line Bridge consisted of recruits working in pairs to walk across a rope to move gear from one side of the bridge to the other. While a pair of recruits make their way across the bridge, the rest of the fire team stood watch to keep an eye out for enemy movement.

"Teamwork and confidence helped us get past each challenge we faced during the Crucible Confidence Course," said Recruit Justice D. Parker, Platoon 2101. "Everything during the course simulated combat situations, such as having to get all of our gear across the Two Line Bridge while others stood watch for the recruits coming across the bridge, and we used what we've learned during recruit training to complete each obstacle we faced."

Another obstacle was the Skyscraper; it is a three story obstacle recruits climbed with their combat load and M16 A-4 service rifle. Recruits make it up the obstacle by reaching out a helping hand to their fellow recruits and pulling them up to the next story of the obstacle.

Once they reached the top they had to climb down a cargo net on the back side of the obstacle.

Eighteen-year old Parker, a Chicago native, explained that there was one goal in his mind and that was mission accomplishment, so he did as the Marines did before him and completed the mission even when his body was weak and tired from buddy drags, ammunition can lifts and all the other hardship challenges recruits go through together during the Crucible Confidence Course.

Next, the Stairway to Heaven stood approximately 50-feet tall towering over recruits as they started their way up the obstacle. Recruits went up and over the obstacle in pairs staying in cadences with each other.

Stallings, a 27-year old Houston native, explained that the Crucible Confidence Course brought it all together for the recruits of Co. E, because they had to rely on their fellow recruits to meet the mission time line, and they shared hardship as they did.

TARGETS ◀ 1

week, Brickley struggled with the rifle marksmanship test and the fear of failure carried over to his present challenge of Table Two combat marksmanship.

If recruits do not pass rifle qualification, it is possible for them to be set back in training. Brickley explained he could not fathom the idea of not graduating with his fellow recruits, with whom he had come so far.

"It came down to the last shot. If I would have missed I would have failed; and then I got five points," said the Anchorage, Alaska native about his qualification.

The qualification requires recruits to fire 42 rounds from 25-yards away and 8 shots from 10-yards away. Each round on target is worth two points and a minimum of 60 points is required to pass.

Before the test, recruits were given a practice run to familiarize themselves with what would be required of them during Table Two. A head shot and firing on moving target were just some of the exercises required.

During the practice run and test, recruits were separated into small groups and given a range coach for supervision and guidance. Recruits were corrected on stance and marksmanship fundamentals by their range coaches. This allowed recruits to learn from their mistakes. When the official test began, the recruits looked noticeably more confident.

"Besides going over the fundamentals with them, the biggest thing I tell them is to relax. That's one of the most common problems recruits have," said Cpl. Rafael Quintana, range coach, Weapons and Field Training Battalion.

Brickley placed the vast majority of his shots on target. According to Staff Sgt. Jared W. Morris, line staff, Alpha Range, Weapons and Field Training Battalion has a 100 percent pass rate and 89.5 percent average score over the past fiscal year.

Morris proudly explained that the success rate correlates to the importance of the training.

"It's not just about putting holes in a target. It's about being proficient with your weapon when under stress. We understand these skills are vital for possible combat situations."

OBSTACLE ◀ 1

"The course builds self-confidence in the recruits," said Sgt. John D. Mazurik, drill instructor. "Recruits have to push through the pain and learn not to quit when they're physically tired."

These types of exercises are meant to help recruits prepare for combat deployments and everyday missions when things are not running smoothly.

"Stress is something you will also find in a combat situation," said 23-year-old Mazurik, a Spokane, Wash., native. "Having a bunch of drill instructors yelling at recruits creates stress but we also motivate them through the course."

After the final obstacle, the rope climb, recruits performed combat carries with fellow recruits.

Instructors demonstrated two different combat carries the recruits could use to evacuate an injured person. The first carry taught was the fireman's carry and then the buddy drag.

The obstacle course may just be a series of different challenges recruits had to overcome, but in a real combat scenario it may be life or death to get over a wall or up a 20 foot rope, explained Mazurik.

BRIEFS

MANILA, Philippines - By Wednesday morning, U.S. Marines from 3rd Marine Expeditionary Brigade had distributed approximately 384,400 pounds of relief supplies and helped 1,735 people displaced by Typhoon Haiyan/Yolanda find their way to Manila.

Operation Damayan, the U.S. government's response to the Philippine government's request for humanitarian assistance, had led to 12 U.S. Marine KC-130J Hercules fixed wing aircraft and eight MV-22B Ospreys from 1st Marine Aircraft Wing, to deploy to the Philippines to help supplies, survivors, military and civilian relief personnel reach typhoon affected areas of the country still largely impassable due to debris, flooding and a breakdown in ground transportation.

"Clearly the U.S. military offers unique capabilities," said Daniel Dieckhaus, a humanitarian assistance adviser with the office of U.S. Foreign Disaster Assistance. "Without the U.S. military helping the Philippine armed forces with air transport capability there would be no way of getting to some of these areas."

and logistics enablers.

"The current situation remains the same. It's a serious disaster and there are a lot of people in need," said Dieckhaus. "But we have ramped up significantly in the last 72 to 96 hours and we know where to target. We are here, but there is a lot of work to do."

"The men and woman of the U.S. armed forces assisting the Republic of the Philippines are as dedicated to this mission as they are to the defense of their country," said Brig. Gen. Paul Kennedy, the deputy commander of III Marine Expeditionary Force and the commanding general of the 3rd MEB. "Assisting fulfills a promise that we made to friends and allies we've maintained a great relationship with over the last 100 years to be here in their time of need."

Typhoon Haiyan/Yolanda has impacted more than 4.2 million people across 36 provinces in the Philippines, according to the Philippine's national disaster risk reduction and management council.

Although stressful, hectic and at times confusing, this real-world operation tested the joint training and collaboration skills of U.S. and Philippine forces, who worked together to resolve problems and provide aid as one unit during the Philippine-led operation.

"We have been working with [Marines] all throughout the year and for years before that," said Col. Miguel E. Okol, the director of the public information office, Philippine air force. "The Marine Corps is optimized similar to ours, very disciplined and hardworking and on behalf of our leadership we appreciate their help."

It doesn't matter where Marines are or what they are doing this time of year, there is always one thing that they are doing: celebrating the Marine Corps birthday.

Even though the birthday is on November 10, Marines from Marine Corps Recruit Depot San Diego participated in several ceremonies and events throughout the week celebrating the Corps' 238th birthday.

The first event was the annual Marine Corp Birthday Cake Cutting Ceremonies at the veterans hospital and Naval Medical Center San Diego Nov. 4. These ceremonies are held to help former Marines and those unable to attend ceremonies elsewhere to share in the tradition of remembering the birth of the Corps and honoring those who served throughout its rich history.

"This is my first birthday ceremony and it motivates me," said Pfc. Alexander A. Strickrodt, Wounded Warrior Battalion West. "Being a part of all of the history and traditions makes me feel connected to all of the Marines before me."

Another depot tradition honoring the birthday was the 2013 Marine Corps Birthday Dedication Run held from November 5 to 7. Marines took turns running continuous one-mile laps around the area of Shepherd Field over two days. The event kicked off with Brig. Gen. James W. Bierman, commanding general of the depot and the Western Recruiting Region, running the first mile. Marines from depot units then took turns running the one-mile lap with the depot colors and handing the colors to the next runner in relay-style. The dedication run continued throughout the days and nights until it was time for the final three miles which were ran by all depot Marines in formation.

The annual depot Marine Corps Birthday Cake Cutting Ceremony and Uniform Pageant was held Nov. 8 after Morning Colors. Family and friends of graduating new Marines, along with depot personnel, reflected on the 238-year history of the Corps as told through the parade of period uniforms from the Revolutionary War to today. The birthday cake was cut by Brig. Gen. Bierman and he presented a piece of cake to the oldest and youngest Marine present.

The week of celebrations concluded with the MCRD San Diego/WRR Marine Corps Birthday Ball held later that evening. The guest of honor for the ball was Maj. Gen. Steven W. Busby, commanding general of the 3rd Marine Aircraft Wing.

LA JOLLA, Calif. – Marines from the Marine Corps Recruit Depot San Diego held a special cake cutting ceremony for veterans at the Veterans Affairs Health Care System, Nov. 4.

Depot Marines brought the ceremony to the veterans hospital to celebrate the 238th Marine Corps birthday with veterans and disabled Marines in the local San Diego area.

The Marine Corps birthday is a tradition well celebrated by all Marines past and present. The actual birthdate of the Marine Corps is Nov. 10 while the week prior contains all of the events and ceremonies.

"The ceremony was great and it never gets old," said Sgt.

Maj. Bill Paxton, Marine Corps veteran. "Oorah!"

Veterans and civilians of all ages and services attended the ceremony. The cake was marched out to a slowed down version of the Marine Corps hymn. Waiting for it at the end of the aisle was Jeffery Gerring, director of the Veteran Affairs Health Care System and next to him was the guest of honor, Brig. Gen. James W. Bierman, Commanding General, MCRD San Diego and the Western Recruiting Region.

The Marine Corps tradition is for the guest of honor to take the first piece of cake to show honor and respect to them for what they do to the Marine Corps.

The second piece goes to both the oldest and youngest Marines present, in this case that was veteran (former sergeant) Curtis C. Harvey who is 79 and Sgt. Angus O. Powers who is 26. The passing of the cake symbolizes the passing of knowledge and experience from one generation to the next.

"I really couldn't believe that I was the oldest Marine present," said Harvey, a native of Houston, TX. "It was truly an honor."

Sgt. Harvey served as an infantryman and a military police officer in the Marine Corps from Jan. 3, 1952 until Jan. 4, 1955.

"This is the time where we can all come together and celebrate the life of the Marine Corps and all the lives of the men and women who have paid the ultimate sacrifice," said Harvey.

Although the Marine Corps birthday is something every Marine celebrates, it hasn't always been like that. The first formal celebration was not until 1925 and the cake cutting part of the ceremony was not entered into the drill manual until 1956 by Gen. Lamuel C. Shepard, 20th Commandant of the Marine Corps.

At the end of the ceremony, the cake was marched back to the back of the room and it was cut into pieces by MCRD Marines, and served to all of the attendees.

Veterans shared stories about their favorite memories when they were Marines, and stories of their encounters with young Marines.

"This is the only ceremony I go to," said Sgt. Frank C. Manthei, Marine Corps Veteran. "This ceremony makes me truly proud to be a Marine."

Sgt. Curtis C. Harvey, the oldest Marine present, enjoys the second piece of birthday cake at the Veteran Affairs Health Care System, Nov. 4. Harvey served three years in the Marine Corps as an infantryman and a military police officer.

Marine follows dream, becomes drill instructor

Sgt. Adi Luminare, drill instructor, Platoon 2107, Company E, migrated from Romania with his family in 1991 to pursue better opportunities in the United States.

CPL. PEDRO CARDENAS

The United States is sometimes referred to as the land of opportunity. For Sgt. Adi Luminare, drill instructor, Platoon 2107, Company E, 2nd Recruit Training Battalion, migrating to the U.S. provided an opportunity to achieve his goals of becoming a drill instructor and having a better life.

"I always wanted to be a drill instructor ever since recruit training. Once I was promoted to sergeant, I volunteered," said Luminare. "In my mind if I became a drill instructor, I could help Marines with anything."

Luminare grew up in Bucharest, Romania, in a poor family. He learned to appreciate the simpler things in life because of his tough childhood. His father worked several jobs to provide for the family while his mother stayed at home. Sometimes working multiple jobs wasn't enough to support a family of eight.

"It was hard because food was scarce. You had to save and eat rations. Our desserts were soggy bread with sugar on it," said 28-year-old Luminare. "We had to boil our water and then pour it on us in the tub to shower."

Despite all the hardships, his family remained close and in 1991, the Luminare family's luck changed. His cousins who lived in the U.S. entered and registered his family in a special sponsorship lottery. If chosen, all expenses were paid by the lottery for those members to move permanently to the U.S. The Luminare family was selected.

"I was only seven but I remember my parents were jumping for joy," said Luminare. "People in Romania only dream of America."

Luminare remembered looking at all the signs in the airport and not knowing what any of it meant when he arrived Feb. 14, 1991. When people asked questions his family used signs to communicate.

Luminare had never attended school, but shortly after his arrival, he was placed in the second grade. He used phonics to learn English and adapted quickly to the American way of life.

After high school, he moved to North Carolina and started his own granite countertops business. He met some Marines at church and liked the way they presented themselves. Luminare decided to enlist in the Marine Corps.

"I started talking with the Marines and it was the dress blue uniform that got me," said Luminare. "I didn't even think about the other branches."

Luminare shipped off to recruit training Sept. 22, 2008. Once in recruit training, he was impressed with the drill instructors. Their demeanor and their knowledge of the Marine Corps enticed him to aspire and become one of the best himself.

He worked hard after recruit training in order to be promoted quickly. He wanted to apply to drill instructor school as soon as possible.

While deployed to Afghanistan in 2011, three years after he enlisted, he was selected to be meritoriously promoted to the rank of sergeant. He was promoted on March 2, 2012, making him eligible for drill instructor duty. Immediately after his promotion, he volunteered and achieved one of his life goals.

"I followed my dream, my plan and I made it. I did what I set out to do," said Luminare.

As a drill instructor, Luminare ensures his recruits learn to the best of their abilities. He pushes them to their limits.

"He is passionate about training recruits and genuinely cares," said Staff Sgt. Eric Flores, senior drill instructor, a Palmdale, Calif., native. "He is very demanding and expects the best from the recruits he is training."

According to Luminare, he will make the Marine Corps his career. He wants to pass on to the next generation of Marines his personal experiences, to lead by example and never give up.

"I'm going to teach them to have morals and values," said Luminare. "Most importantly the lesson is that your family is always there to get through the tough times."

Col. Richard D. Hall

Parade Reviewing Officer

Col. Richard D. Hall joined the Marine Corps in November 1976 and attended recruit training at Marine Corps Recruit Depot San Diego. After training he was transferred to the 2nd Marine Division. He finished his enlistment while serving with 3rd Battalion, 8th Marines and completing a Mediterranean deployment. He was honorably discharged in August 1980.

Enlisting a second time in July 1982, Hall served on the West Coast until being selected for the Marine Enlisted Commissioning Education Program. He was transferred to the University of Washington where he earned a Bachelor of Arts degree in Economics and a commission as a second lieutenant.

He transferred to Quantico,

Va., where he attended The Basic School and the Infantry Officers Course before receiving orders to 1st Marine Division.

Hall reported to 1st Battalion, 1st Marines where, from 1988 to 1992, he served as a weapons platoon commander, rifle platoon commander, company executive officer, and battalion adjutant. After participating in Operations Desert Shield/Desert Storm and two Western Pacific deployments, Hall was ordered to Marine Corps Security Force Company, Concord, Calif., where he served as a guard/security officer and executive officer.

In March 1994, Hall was again transferred to Quantico, where he served as commanding officer, Service Company, Headquarters and Service Battalion until August 1995.

Hall subsequently attended Command and Control Systems School and received follow-on orders to Twentynine Palms, Calif. There he served first as a battalion logistics officer, and then as commanding officer, Company F, 7th Battalion, 7th Marines.

In June 1998, Hall transferred back to Quantico, where he served as the branch head of science and technology for the Office of Science and Innovation at Marine Corps Combat Deployment Command.

From 1999 to 2001, Hall served as the commanding officer, Combat Instructor Company, Instructor Battalion at The Basic School. He then attended Command and Staff College, graduating with distinction. He followed by serving as the executive officer for 1st Battalion, 7th Marines during its deployment to Iraq in support of Operations Enduring and Iraqi Freedom in January 2003.

Upon returning from Iraq in October 2003, Hall transferred to the Marine Air Ground Task Force Training Command where he served as the future plans officer. He subsequently served as the executive officer, 7th Marine Regiment until transferring to Fort Benning, Ga., in June 2005 where he served as the commanding officer of the Marine Detachment.

In 2007, Hall returned to Twentynine Palms, serving initially at Tactical Training Exercise Control Group, then assuming the duties of commanding officer, 2nd Battalion, 7th Marines, deploying to Afghanistan from March to December 2008.

In June 2009, Hall attended the Naval War College in Newport Rhode Island, graduating with distinction and as the honor graduate. He most recently served as the chief of the Joint Training Branch, Joint and Coalition Warfighting, J7, Joint Staff in Suffolk, Va.

Hall's personal decorations include the Defense Superior Service Medal, the Legion of Merit Medal, the Bronze Star Medal, the Meritorious Service Medal (second award), the Navy and Marine Corps Commendation Medal with Combat "V" (third award), the Navy and Marine Corps Achievement Medal (second award), the Combat Action Ribbon (third award), the Good Conduct Medal (third award), and the Army's Order of Saint Maurice.

Recruits tested on basic Marine skills

STORY & PHOTOS BY
CPL. PEDRO CARDENAS
Chevron staff

Recruits of Company I, 3rd Recruit Training Battalion, applied their basic Marine Corps knowledge during their practical examination aboard the depot, Nov. 5.

The examination is a graduation requirement.

"It gives them the basic knowledge of the necessary skills used in the Marine Corps," said Staff Sgt. Daniel C. Rivera, drill instructor, Platoon 3207. "We break it down for them so they are able to comprehend everything they have to learn."

Recruits began by taking a written exam. The exam consists of 100 multiple choice questions that includes history, uniform wear and Uniform Code of Military Justice regulations.

Then, recruits moved on to recognition quiz. Posters with every rank, uniform and rifle parts were displayed along with five magnets. Each magnet has a different item written on it. The recruits had to correctly match the magnet to the image on the poster.

Afterward, recruits performed combat first aid on a simulated casualty. Recruits had to diagnose the appropriate injury to the casualty. There were three types of injuries including chest wound, open fracture and chemical burn.

Recruits then moved on to the assembly and disassembly of the M16-A4 service rifle. Recruits were handed a disassembled weapon and then had to put it together. At the end, they performed a weapon's function check to ensure the weapon could fire properly.

"I wasn't really thinking. We have done it so many times that it becomes muscle memory," said 18-year-old Recruit Andrew V. Culp, Plt. 3205.

For the last part of the test, recruits perform a simulated check-in procedure. At every new unit, Marines report for duty to their first sergeant in their Service-A uniform.

For most recruits, combat first aid proved the biggest challenge because while they treated the patient they also to recruits talk to the simulated victim to help prevent the victim from going into shock.

"For combat scenarios you have to remember a lot of details and I didn't want to miss any of that. I didn't want to fail," said Culp, an Albuquerque, N.M., native. Drill instructors helped recruits instilling confidence in their abilities.

"If they stay collected, focused and minimize their mistakes they will do well," said Rivera an Oxnard, Calif., native. "I tell them to relax, that way they can be smooth and fast at the same time."

Recruits who failed risked being dropped to the next training company. However, they were given another opportunity to remediate.

For Co. I, the practical examination marked the completion of the last academic hurdle for recruits. Now, they must complete the Crucible and earn the title Marine to become part of the history and tradition of the Corps.

"I want to be part of that long tradition," said Culp. "It starts by knowing our history and understanding where we come from and what we do."

After assembling an M16-A4 service rifle, Recruit Dakota A. Bahr, Platoon 3205, Company I, 3rd Recruit Training Battalion, performs a functions check to ensure his rifle properly fires during the practical examination aboard the depot, Nov. 5.

Recruit Martin L. Ramirez, Platoon 3206, matches a magnet to the appropriate uniform during the practical application examination. Marines must know the components and regulations of each uniform to appropriately wear it.

Recruit Connor J. Carroll, Platoon 3205, treats a simulated chest wound during the practical application test. To help keep the test realistic, recruits talk to the simulated victim to prevent him from going into shock.
